RE: 164 STATE, LOCAL, AND NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS CALL FOR IMMEDIATE 18-MONTH DESIGNATION OF TEMPORARY PROTECTED STATUS OR DEFERRED ENFORCED DEPARTURE FOR MAURITANIA

Dear President Biden and Secretary Mayorkas:

The undersigned 164 state, local, and national organizations write to call for an immediate 18-month designation of Temporary Protected Status (TPS) or Deferred Enforced Departure (DED) for Mauritania in light of ongoing human rights violations, including slavery, which have been compounded by COVID-19 and other humanitarian concerns. TPS and DED are effective and proven policy tools created to ensure that the United States does not return anyone to countries where they would face loss of freedom or threats to their lives.<sup>1</sup> Given the extreme nature of the human rights crisis in Mauritania, an immediate designation of either TPS or DED is warranted and necessary to safeguard vulnerable people in the United States and promote U.S. foreign policy objectives.

I. TEMPORARY PROTECTED STATUS AND DEFERRED ENFORCED DEPARTURE

TPS was created by Congress as a blanket protection to safeguard nationals in the United States if conditions in their country of origin make safe return impossible. The Secretary of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) may designate a country for TPS if conditions in the country meet requirements regarding ongoing armed conflict, natural disasters (including epidemics), or other extraordinary conditions. TPS provides protection from deportation and permission to work in the United States for the duration of the designation.

DED was established to provide the president with a vital foreign policy tool for protecting foreign nationals in the United States from civil, political, and humanitarian crises in their home countries or otherwise suspending deportation to serve U.S. foreign policy interests.<sup>2</sup> Like TPS, DED provides protection from deportation and work authorization.

II. TPS OR DED FOR MAURITANIA IS WARRANTED UNDER THE LAW AND BY MORALITY

Slavery, Human Trafficking, and Sexual and Gender Based Violence:

Mauritania is currently facing extraordinary conditions that warrant an immediate, 18-month designation of either TPS or DED. While Mauritania criminalized slavery in 2007 -- the last country in the world to do so -- the practice continues widely, with at least 90,000 people in Mauritania currently enslaved.<sup>3</sup> The United Nations estimates that the number of people enslaved in Mauritania is much higher, with up to 680,000 out of a total population of 3.4 million.<sup>4</sup> Even when taking more conservative estimates into account, Mauritania's population has one of the highest percentages per capita of enslaved populations in the world.<sup>5</sup>

Additionally, reports show ongoing use of rape by slave owners to increase their enslaved workforce.<sup>6</sup> In early 2020, there were multiple documented cases of enslaved children escaping bondage, only to be ordered returned to their so-called "masters" by local courts.<sup>7</sup> In Mauritania, people who are enslaved inherit their status so that even those who may escape are subjected to severe discrimination as a result of the racial caste and legal systems.<sup>8</sup> Other human rights issues that make it impossible for women in the United States to be safely returned to Mauritania include the prevalence of child marriage -- with 37 percent of girls in Mauritania married before age 18 and 18 percent married before age 15<sup>9</sup> -- and widespread practice of female genital mutilation.<sup>10</sup> Mauritania also continues to not meet minimum requirements on human trafficking.<sup>11</sup>

Politically-Motivated Arrests and Detentions, Torture, Violent Suppression of Freedom of Speech, State-Sanctioned Violence:

While the United States should immediately designate TPS or DED due to risk of enslavement alone, Mauritians forcibly returned from the United States face other human rights risks. Specifically, politically-motivated arrests, torture, and detentions without due process are prevalent.<sup>12</sup> Mauritanian journalists who report on slavery and human rights violations, as well as activists who speak out, are routinely retaliated against and imprisoned without a transparent or fair trial.<sup>13</sup> Human Rights Watch documented the case of blogger Mohamed Cheikh Ould Mkhaitir who was arrested after speaking out against Mauritania's caste system.<sup>14</sup> He was held for more than 5 years before a court reversed his sentence.<sup>15</sup> Despite the court's ruling, the government continued to hold him in solitary detention for nearly another two years.<sup>16</sup> In another case, police arrested Biram Dah Abeid for publicly burning Islamic law books that he said justified the practice of slavery.<sup>17</sup> Law enforcement charged him for threatening national security and good morals and he was sentenced to death.<sup>18</sup> While he has been released due to international pressure, the death penalty is still pending.<sup>19</sup>

State-sanctioned violence both inside and outside of prison is prevalent. Those who are detained often face inhumane conditions in jails, including overcrowded and unsanitary conditions, lack of water, and torture.<sup>20</sup> Ongoing fact-finding by Amnesty International has uncovered cases including people held in spaces so small they could not extend their arms or legs, waterboarding, people forced to eat sand, beatings with electric cables, being burned with heated knives, and more.<sup>21</sup>

Outside of prison, Mauritians also face state violence, including related to the recent, disputed, 2019 election in Mauritania. Verified video footage shows people being beaten by police during protests.<sup>22</sup> Following the election, the government conducted raids and arrested anti-slavery opposition leaders and journalists.<sup>23</sup> The government also shut down internet and cell phone service for over a week as part of the suppression of information and anti-slavery voices.<sup>24</sup>

A 2019 report from the U.S. Department of State confirms the above mentioned human rights issues in Mauritania and more, stating:

Significant human rights issues included allegations of torture by law enforcement officers; arbitrary and politically motivated arrests; harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; sporadic restrictions on freedom of assembly; restrictions on freedom of association and religion; widespread corruption; crimes of violence against women and girls, which the government took little action to prevent or prosecute; criminalization of same-sex sexual conduct; continued existence of slavery and slavery-related practices with antislavery organizations subjected to restrictions; trafficking in persons; and child labor.<sup>25</sup>

Specific Danger to Mauritians Returning from the United States:

Mauritians deported from the U.S. are targeted and often face additional unique abuses due to their affiliation with the United States. In recent years, those deported to Mauritania from the United States are confirmed to be systematically jailed upon arrival without charge or due process.<sup>26</sup> They are interrogated in coercive and harsh conditions, without access to counsel, about their time in America, and some are released only after they pay a bribe to be released.<sup>27</sup> These issues are compounded by the high number of Mauritians in the United States and elsewhere who are stateless, resulting from past Mauritanian government practices related to stripping human and other rights based on race and ethnic origin.<sup>28</sup>

COVID-19 Health Crisis, Rising Food Insecurity, Land Grabbing:

Land grabbing,<sup>29</sup> food insecurity, and COVID-19 are also widespread concerns making safe return impossible. In mid-2020, USAID estimated nearly 700,000 Mauritians would face crisis or worse levels of food insecurity towards the end of the year.<sup>30</sup> Overall, at least 1.4 million people face some level of food insecurity in Mauritania.<sup>31</sup> Rates of severe acute malnutrition are trending upward, resulting from extreme patterns of flooding and drought in certain areas over the past few years.<sup>32</sup> Human rights abuses and humanitarian needs are compounded by the COVID-19 pandemic, which the Centers for Disease Control classified as “Very High,” the worst rating, in Mauritania.<sup>33</sup>

III. TPS OR DED FOR MAURITANIA IS IN LINE WITH U.S. FOREIGN POLICY INTERESTS

By protecting lives and granting work authorization, TPS or DED serve key national and regional security interests, advance moral and strategic U.S. engagement with the international community, and provide other benefits to the United States. The Biden administration has stated its goal to “restore America’s standing in the world” and that a pillar of its foreign policy will be “championing America’s values and human rights.”<sup>34</sup> TPS or DED for Mauritania must be designated immediately to meet those goals.

The U.S. has recognized ongoing human trafficking and slavery in Mauritania -- resulting in suspension of nonhumanitarian assistance to the country in 2018<sup>35</sup> -- yet deportations from the U.S. to these life- and freedom-threatening conditions are ongoing. An immediate designation of TPS or DED is necessary to safeguard vulnerable Mauritians in the U.S. and send a clear message to the world that the U.S. condemns slavery and will not return people to conditions where they may be enslaved.

Although Mauritania continues to face severe human rights crises, the U.S. has named Mauritania an important strategic partner in counterterrorism and in 2019, then-Secretary of State Mike Pompeo made clear that the United States “looks forward to working together [with Mauritania] to advance human rights and social equality to ensure peace and stability.”<sup>36</sup> Our nation's commitment to achieving these goals is dependent on ensuring that we don't destabilize Mauritania with the return of its nationals when it is unsafe to do so. The U.S. has invested millions of dollars in the country in emergency response aid and other areas.<sup>37</sup> TPS or DED must be part of that ongoing response. While the Mauritanian government continues to fail to follow basic international human rights norms, with devastating human consequences, it is imperative that the United States ensure nationals and stateless Mauritians are able to remain in the U.S. in safety with their families.

IV. CONCLUSION

In line with the above country conditions and policy principles, we urge the Biden administration to immediately grant the maximum protection possible through an 18-month designation of DED or TPS for Mauritania. This relief will not only benefit and protect Mauritanian individuals in the United States, but also their families and communities here and in Mauritania.

Dear Ms. Boukadoum:

Thank you for your February 23, 2021 letter to the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Secretary Mayorkas asked that I respond on his behalf.

The Secretary's discretionary authority to initially designate a country for Temporary Protection Status (TPS) is based upon specific statutory criteria. Based on the Immigration and Nationality Act § 244(b)(1), the Secretary must find one or more of the following: (1) there is an ongoing armed conflict within the country that would pose a serious threat to the personal safety of the country's nationals if they were returned; (2) there has been an environmental disaster resulting in a substantial, but temporary, disruption of the living conditions in the area affected, the country is temporarily unable to handle adequately the return of its nationals, and the country has officially requested TPS designation; or (3) there exist extraordinary and temporary conditions in the country that prevent nationals from returning in safety, unless the Secretary finds that permitting the country's nationals to remain temporarily in the United States would be contrary to the national interest of the United States.

Thank you for the information you have provided on conditions in Mauritania. U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) is closely monitoring conditions in the country. USCIS also offers support that may be available upon request to assist eligible Mauritanian individuals residing in the U.S. who have been affected by these conditions including:

- Change or extension of nonimmigrant status for eligible nationals who are currently in the United States, even if the request is filed after the authorized period of admission has expired;
- Expedited processing of requests for travel authorization (advance parole) documents;
- Expedited adjudication of requests for off-campus employment authorization for F-1 students experiencing severe economic hardship;
- Expedited adjudication of employment authorization applications, where appropriate;
- Replacement of lost or damaged immigration or travel documents issued by USCIS, such as a Permanent Resident Card (Green Card).

More information on these options is available under “Special Situations” on our website at: <https://www.uscis.gov/humanitarian/special-situations>.

Deferred Enforced Departure (DED) is an administrative stay of removal that may be authorized by the President for a designated group of foreign nationals. The authority to grant DED arises from the President’s constitutional authority to conduct the foreign relations of the United States. The President can authorize DED for any reason related to this authority. Although DED is not a specific immigration status, individuals covered by DED are not subject to removal from the United States, usually for a designated period of time. A presidential designation of DED - may direct DHS to offer certain benefits, such as employment and travel authorization, to eligible foreign nationals covered by the DED directive. USCIS is responsible for adjudicating and processing any DED-related applications for employment or travel authorization.

Thank you again for your letter and interest in this important issue. Should you require any additional assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Respectfully,
